Human Subjects Research Advisor Form

Instructions: You must consult with your faculty advisor before completing this form. Please see detailed explanation below.

All applicants must confer with a UI faculty advisor when designing and conducting their project. If you are selected for an award, you must attend the mandatory Stanley Meeting, where you will be required to submit a Human Subjects Research Determination (HRSD) form to ask if approval must be obtained from the UI Institutional Review Board (IRB). The HRSD form is a short form in the electronic IRB application system called HawkIRB. You will provide information about your study design and procedures and an IRB Chair will determine whether your project meets the definition of human subjects research. There are two possible outcomes from an HRSD form:

- IRB approval is required – You must then submit a HawkIRB New Project form and receive IRB approval prior to implementing any research activity. You and your faculty advisor are required to follow all federal regulation and institutional policies regarding the conduct of human subjects research.
- IRB approval is not required – You are free to conduct the project as described in the HSRD form. If you change the project design, the only way to tell if you need IRB approval is to submit another HRSD form

*A representative from the IRB will assist awardees with completing an HRSD form at the mandatory Stanley meeting in March.
