Since the inception of the latest global land rush in 2008, agricultural land in Africa has been a main target for foreign investors. In many of the continent’s countries, large areas of land have been purchased in the hope of making quick profit. This presentation will provide a brief overview of the latest developments of this phenomenon of land grabbing in Africa.

Tijo Salverda is a senior researcher at the University of Cologne’s Global South Studies Center (GSSC), and a research associate of the University of Pretoria’s Human Economy Program.