Engaging in Global Health... where do you start?

Are you planning on becoming an educator, an engineer or lawyer? Or perhaps a dietician, political scientist, nurse or social activist?

There are many ways to get involved in global health, and this 1 credit hour weekend course will show you how. Find out what you can do while you are still in school. Discover the vast array of career opportunities available in the promotion of global health.

During this workshop, students will hear from both students and professionals, as they share their experiences in global health. Students will gain an understanding of how professionals and volunteers work in a broad variety of settings. Discussions will include presenters’ experiences working with government-based programs, international organizations like UNICEF, health care agencies, faith-based organizations, industry, and academic institutions. At the conclusion of this course, students will know a variety of ways to become engaged, to get involved in global health!

Contact: Christine C. Brunner Luse, christine-brunnerluse@uiowa.edu